Food Shortages

As lush and productive as is this island, there are food shortages. Meat is rationed to three quarters of a pound a week for each citizen. Even fruit and vegetables seem to be scarce. Long lines of customers form each night outside restaurants.

Leone Acts To Resolve Italy Crisis Little Sentiment

Seen for Election

By Israel Shenker

ROME, Oct. 4 (NYT).—Pres-ident Giovanni Leone announced plans today for broad consulta-tions with political leaders to solve the political crisis which opened yesterday with the government's resignation.

Premier Mariano Rumor's center-left coalition had been in office 205 days. President Leone is expected to hear a great deal of support for yet another center-left coalition. The parties in the government that resigned yesterday were the Christian Democratic, the Socialist and the Social Democratic—with support in parliament from the Repub-

There is little sentiment for dissolving parliament and ad-vancing the elections now scheduled for 1977. "Elections are a mad adventure," warned Fran-cesco de Martino, secretary of the Socialist party.

Consultations Scheduled

Monday, Mr. Leone will see Italy's ex-Presidents Giovanni Gronchi and Gluseppe Saragat, then the presidents and ex-pres idents of parliament's two chambers, as well as six former premiers. Tuesday and Wednesday, he will meet with leaders of all the parliamentary parties. Only then will he be able to announce his decision on how to proceed toward formation of Italy's 37th post-Fascist government.

Political leaders are trying to shift the blame for the crisis onto one another, warning of the grav-ity of the economic situation. Following a breakdown of labormanagement negotiations, Fiat, Europe's largest car maker, announced today that it was putting 65.000 workers on short time to reduce production by 200,000 ve-

The Social Democratic party has advanced its Central Committee meeting to Monday. Mario Tanassi, the party president, warned againt any Socialist moves to allow the Communists into a government coalition. "It would be like giving sugar to a diabetic,'

Mr. Tanassi played a crucial role in the crisis through his attacks on the Socialist party and his declaration last week that the center-left was dead. Healey Hints U.K. Will Not Curb Oil Use

By Ierry Robards

LONDON, Oct. 4 (NYT) .-Chancellor of the Exchequer Denis Healey suggested today that Britain would not be willing to under-take any major cutback in its oil consumption as part of a general effort to farce down the world price of petrolcum.

At the same time, Mr. Healey, who is Britain's chief financial officer, acknowledged that discussions about possible cutbacks in consumption had taken place in Washington last weekend during a meeting of top officials of the major industrialized countries. While not flatly ruling out a decision by Britain to curtail its oil imports, Mr. Healey noted that oil consumption here had fallen by about 10 per cent in the last year, partly because of consumer resistance to price increases. Substantial Consequences

He suggested that there was little further room for Britain to curb its consumption without substantial economic consequences. He said it would be "totally illogical and irrational" to curtail oil imports if such a curtailment threatened industrial production in any way.

Mr. Healey was one of the oiings last weekend involving Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, Treasury Secretary William Simon and the foreign and finance ministers of West Germany. France and Japan, as well as After the meeting, reports circulated that Mr. Kissinger had recommended that major cutbacks in oil consumption be undertaken as the first step in bringing down prices. Petroleum prices have quadrupled in the last year due mainly to increases posted by the Arab oil-producing nations. When asked today, Mr. Healey denied that the United States had suggested that the consuming nations reduce their oil consumption by 15 per cent. He described reports of such a suggestion as "not accurate," although he confirmed that some cutbacks were discussed. Very Unfair To suggest that Britain curb its oil imports by anything like 15 per cent, the chancellor said. would be "very unfair" in light of the reduction in consumption that had already occurred here and the fact that per capita oil usage is much lower here than in the United States. He referred to a "waste of energy" in the United States and suggested that, if any major cutbacks should be made by any country, the United States should curb its consumption the most. Other countries he said might reduce their oil imports by some-

Ford to Ask Sacrifices ByAmerica

But Bars Raising Gasoline Taxes

By Peter Milius

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4 (WP). -President Ford has ruled out an increase in the federal excise tax on gasoline as part of the economic program he will present to Congress Tuesday, White House Press Secretary Ronald Nessen said today. Mr. Nessen, in briefing newsmen, shied away when a ques-tioner asked if Mr. Ford's proposals would amount to an "austerity program." But he did say that it "will call for sacrifices from the American people."

The President, he said. "in-tends as much as possible to have these evenly distributed." He also said that Mr. Ford told the GOP leadership he thought the pro-gram would be one they could

In referring to economic policy alternatives being urged on Mr. Ford, the press secretary said that the President "has been and remains opposed to gasoline ra-tioning." But Mr. Nessen would not rule out the possibility that Mr. Ford may ask for a tax increase of another kind, saying, "I will not go into specifics."

Percentage Surtax Meanwhile, members of the Republican leadership in Congress, who met with Mr. Ford this morning, said that he is, at least, considering asking Congress for an income tax increase, perhaps in the form of a percentage surtax on families above some specific income level.

They also said that the President is seriously considering, as part of his package:

 Selective tax reductions for industry, by raising the present 7-per-cent investment credit for some industries whose products are in particularly great demand and short supply, and thus encouraging them to expand their plants and capacity as a way of cooling off inflation

The investment credit lets corporations deduct from their taxes owed part of the cost of new plant and equipment.

· Tax reductions also for familles at lower income levels, to compensate them for inflation and also, hopefully, to moderate wage demands. something of that kind will be recommended," a member of Congress said.

· Aid to the unemployed, most likely in the form of an expanded public service employment program, under which the federal government gives state and local governments money to hire workers without jobs as unemployment rises.

• Aid to the housing industry.

which has been particularly hardhit by rising interest rates and the drying-up of mortgage money. Extra Funds

In the short run, a participant in today's sessions said, Mr. Ford may ask for extra funds from Congress so that the government can buy up from savings and loan associations not just federally insured mortgages, as now, but conventional mortgages as well. This would give the loan associations fresh money for new mortgages.

For the long run, the source said, the President will probably ask Congress to change the lending laws to put savings and loans and other lending institutions on a more equal footing

The idea, put forward months ago by a panel known as the Hunt Commission, is to reduce the present compartmentalization of the lending industry, so savings and loans will no longer be the overwhelming source of mortgage money, and mortgages will be more readily available than they are now in tight-money times. The congressional sources emphasized, as did Mr. Nessen, that the President is still making up his mind exactly what to include in his package, which he will present to a joint session of the House and Senate at 4 p.m.

It's at least four times more accurate than any other type of wristwatch.

The Seiko Quartz has no mainspring, no balance wheel, no alloy tuning fork. Instead, the time is kept by a tiny goldcoated quartz crystal which is vacuum-

Indian Power and Aims Cause Uneasiness in Bangladesh

DACCA, Oct. 4.—Three years after Indian armed forces contributed mightly to the creation of an independent Bangladesh, hostility to India is prevalent here.

Officials of Bangladesh and India still say that relations between the two nations are cordial. but that is not reflected in the attitudes of most Bengalis outside the government. More than any specific grievance, many Bengalis seem to hold against India its position of dominance in the Asian subcontinent and its ability to influence, if not control, events in Bangladesh by virtue of its

Some Bengalis maintain that India's interest in the 1971 war, which led to the creation of Bangladesh out of what had been East Pakistan, was primarily selfish. Bangladesh is basically the product of Indian expansionism on the one hand and Bengali popular will on the other," Mr. Khan said.

Disillusionment with India is to some extent a reflection of Rengladesh's increasingly severe internal problems. Just as India was greatly responsible when Bangladesh achieved nationhood, India must now take the blame for the country's distress, some Bengalis seem to think

One of the most sensitive issues involving India is the Farakka Barrage, a dam on the Ganges River 12 miles inside the Indian border. When it is put into operation in December, the dam will divert water from the Ganges to the Hooghly River, which runs through Calcutta. The purpose is to clear Calcutta's port of silt, which has made it all but unnavigable.

Bengalis fear that because of the diversion the lower Ganges, which runs through Bengladesh and empties into the Bay of Bengal, will run dry during the dry season. While such fears are probably unfounded, no one is certain what effect the dam's operation will have. It is conceivable that some persons in Bangladesh will be dislocated. Kissinger to Seek to Set Up Early Talks

By Bernard Gwertzman

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4 (NYT). Secretary of State Henry Kissinger hopes to prod Israeli and Arab leaders to agree to an early resumption of negotiations during his trip to the Middle East next week, a senior U.S. official said yesterday.

But the official said that the exact timing and framework for such talks remained uncertain, and the belief expressed here early in the summer that such talks could begin by late fall seems to have faded considerably in recent weeks.

The Israelis, who assert that they are flexible on negotiations, blame a tougher Arab stance for delays. The Arabs, in turn, accuse the Israelis of stalling on further troop withdrawals In a cautious appraisal of the diplomatic situation, officials said that, despite nearly two months of intensive discussions in Washington and New York, no firm decision on the next stage in the Arab-Israeli dialogue had been made. Mr. Witteveen declared that, although the world faced grave problems caused by rampant inflation and high oil prices, "I am an optimist by nature. I am encouraged by this meeting that we will have effective international cooperation to overcome these difficulties."

Warns Rgainst Restraints He repeated his warnings to governments against using excessive economic restraint to slow down inflation and end their balance-of-payments deficits.

No major decisions emerged from the joint conference, at which considerable pessimism was expressed about the world's economic prospects.

World Bank President Robert McNamara told the closing session that it was clear that for developing countries a return to more normal conditions would require a substantial shift in investment and changes in trade pat-terns which could only be achieved over several years. During the transitional period, those countries would need sub-stantially more capital, he said. "It is clear that the bank must play a part in mobilizing the additional resources required and in allocating them to countries and sectors in the greatest need," Mr. McNamara added.

He noted that there had been wide agreement that oil-producing countries should have a greater voice in the operations of the World Bank and the IDA, which makes interest-free loans to the needlest countries.

The remaining $75 million was in the form of a subordinated loan provided by Bank Melli Iran. The bank is the national bank of Iran, which has ordered 80 F-14s. The restoration of commercial credit ended a long period of turmoil. Last summer, the Senate refused to approve increased Navy loans that were planned to forestall a cash drain at Grumman and permit continued F-14 production.

The Foreign Aid Debate

this year has prompted a brawl. But the brawl has come closer to being an authentic "national debate" on American foreign policy than the formal "national debate" launched last summer in the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. There are several reasons for this. One is that aid, which is out in the open, is taking the flak directed recently at CIA for its earlier machinations in Chile. Another is that more or less simultaneous bursts of domestic repression or abuse of power in a number of states receiving aldpost-Allende Chile. South Vietnam, South Korea, Turkey—quite naturally forced sharp debate on the wisdom of underwriting the governments of these particular countries. Again, the persistence of substantial requests for military aid in a world in which local political tensions continue and economic duress grows could not fail to draw concern. Finally, Mr. Nixon's resignation, Mr. Ford's newness and Mr. Kissinger's various distractions left the executive branch unable to focus well on either the drafting or the defending of an aid bill.

As of the moment, of course, there is no aid bill. Both administration and congressional managers of the legislation lost control on the Senate floor and, after unacceptable amendments had proliferated like guests at a free bar, the administration succeeded in getting the bill shelved until after the November elections, if not until the next Congress. It has been shooting for stopgap authority to continue old programs in the interim. The administration has been especially worried by the threat of an aid cutoff simed at Turkey. Overall, the dollars involved are relatively few, but they finance programs with high visibility and political symbolism. Aid to Vietnam, which the Congress is determined to cut substantially, is a good example.

Those, including ourselves, who have long supported the idea of foreign aid would be gratified to find that, underneath their dif-

Always controversial, the foreign aid bill ferences, the administration and Congress share a basic consensus supporting a reasonable aid bill. But frankly, we do not find this to be the case. Mr. Ford and Mr. Kissinger start from a perception that aid is essential to shore up a deteriorating American global position. It is this large rationale which inclines them to offer aid to clients who, on grounds of their own individual moral or political worthiness, might be denied. The thrust in the legislature, however, is to get American commitments back in line with American capabilities and American values, and this means looking at each aid program with a very beady eye. From the White House the basic outlook is broad and strategic; from Capitol Hill, particular and domestic-political. It is a measure of the American people's considerable ambivalence and confusion on this fundamental issue that they seated a president with one view and a Congress with another.

Is there a way to work out these differences? In one sense, yes; in a month or two or three, after much struggling and with much complaining on all sides, there will be some sort of aid bill. We all must accept, however, that we are in the presence of a very profound and unsettling question. The world is changing faster than our perception of it and our policy toward it. Aid, perhaps more than any other instrument of American policy, represents an effort to influence the future in other lands. Yet Americans may never have been more uncertain about the purpose of exercising such influence, or about their own taste or talent for it. Obviously, no happy answer can be expected out of this flux. What is vital, however, is that the discussion of alternatives proceed carefully and openly, and with a respectful awareness that we are in a difficult new situation, and with as little as possible jousting for personal, political or institutional advantage. We cannot be sure that we will make the right choices but we can try to make them well.

THE WASHINGTON POST.

Saving on Oil

industrial nations have been grappling all week with the problem of how to gain control of a worsening global economic situation but have not yet found a common approach.

The heart of the problem is the enormous disequilibrium produced in their balance of payments by the huge increase of the crude oil price by members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries. This year sione OPEC could run a payments surplus of $80 billion.

Within the International Monetary Fund and World Bank, the effort is to stave off disaster by creating mechanisms for channeling a large part of the billions of "petrodollars" back to the oil-importing countries. But, important as that effort is, it must be recognized that any scheme to recycle petrodollars, however vast or ingenious, is no solution to the basic disequilibrium created by the exorbitant oil price and the confrontation tactics by which the oil cartel has pushed up the price.

The only answer to such tactics is a cut in consumption by the oil-importing countries. The U.S. government, in its secret meeting last weekend with the representatives of France, West Germany, Britain and

The top financial officials of the world's Japan, did suggest a substantial cutback in oil consumption, reportedly 15 per cent. The other nations reacted cautiously, hesitant to invite retaliation by the oil cartel. Some doubt the cartel price can be broken.

This is a defeatist position—and one that makes little sense even if the oil producers are able to maintain present prices a while longer. For the industrialized nations cannot go on incurring enormous deficits indefinitely. A breakdown disastrous for the world economy could come within a year or

What is needed now is a large-scale conservation program by the oil-consuming countries, even though this will mean difficult internal adjustments in every field. France, with its plan to set a $10-billion limit on oil imports, has provided one model for curbing undue oil deficits. The United States, while urging others to join with it. must itself move promptly to a stringent conservation program of its own.

Making the oil producers turn back from the abyss into which they are forcing the world economy will come more easily when this country proves by its actions that it knows how to economize on energy.

Worldly Letters

It may say something about the state of the century since 1901 that the Nobel Prizes in Literature are less controversial and more lasting than those awarded for peace. Books and plays live; peacemakers hover under a sword of Damocles. The joint award this year to Eyvind Johnson and Harry Edmund Martinson, both Swedish novelists and poets, will not be disputed by the comparatively small number of readers in the United States who know their work and admire the lyric, mythic nature of Nordic literature.

It also says something about the Swedish Academy's impartiality that the last nativeborn Swede to receive the literature award was Par F. Lagerkvist in 1951. The Nobel Prize in Literature is more worldly than political, which cannot be said for some of the major book awards in the United States, Literature continues to cross the divide among men and nations and, in this respect, the Swedish Academy honors its peaceful

Portugal's Political Arrests

As soon as Gen. Spinola resigned, the unveiling of a fascist plot and the arrest of counter-revolutionaries commenced. Nobody knows how many people have been put in prison. Only a few names have been released. These, not unexpectedly, are mostly personalities of the Caetano regime. But evidence is growing that the government's security apparatus, known as "Copcon," has detained many who were not directly connected with the Caetano government-though the people, especially in managerial positions, who play ball with an authoritarian regime always vastly outnumber those who openly repudiate it. The present roundup of "suspects" looks like a purely political maneuver to intimidate the whole of the "silent majority" which wanted to demonstrate peaceably its support for Gen. Spinola and was stopped from doing so. There is yet no democracy in Portugal. The professed object of the Armed Forces Movement was to install one. WASHINGTON.—The man to watch in the Ford administration over the next few months is Donald "Rummy" Rumsfeld, 42, the former U.S. ambassador to NATO, who has just taken over as the President's top staff coordinator at the White House.

Top coordinators usually wind up on the bottom of the pile in this town, but if anybody can bring order and new talent into the Ford administration, Rumsfeld will be in the slot to do it. He will not have the authority of H.R. Haldeman, or Al Haig, who were President Nixon's chiefs of staff in the White House, but Ford insisted on giving him a job he didn't want to take, and is likely to give him as much running room as he needs.

The two men have been close for years. Rumsfeld served four terms in the House of Representatives from the fashionable Chicago, and led the fight to make Ford the Republican leader of the House.

Capable

He was seriously considered by Ford, along with Nelson Rockefeller, and Republican National Chairman George Bush, for nomination as vice-president after the resignation of Nixon, and has strong support within the Republican party as one of the most attractive and capable leaders of the rising generation.

He was off touring with his family in Italy in the last days of the Nixon administration and heard the news late. He called Washington and was asked by Ford to fly immediately to Washington to help with the staffing of the White House.

At that time, his advice was to move quickly to establish Ford's own men in the White House and the Cabinet. It was practical to give a sense of continuity for short while, he suggested, but if the President waited beyond the November election, it would be more difficult to change and might even give the impression that Ford was merely presiding over the old Nixon team.

The new President did not take his advice then, and is coming under increasing criticism for not moving faster. Presumably, Rumsfeld had some assurance that the waiting period is over and that he would be given the task of helping speed things up.

No Easy Job It will not be an easy job. In the early days of the administration, Ford was urged by some of his associates, not by Rums-feld, to give his administration a national character by selecting the best men he could find, regardless of party. According to this thesis, he would have a wider choice of talents and could demonstrate that, as a man appointed rather than elected, and confirmed by a Democratic Congress, he was determined to offer a country sick of politics a substantially new nonpartisan administration. Ford did not follow this advice either. He has shown a tendency to turn to old friends, to keep on many Nixon appointees who have very little to do around the White House, and to transfer

Show-Trial by Prox

By William Safire

WASHINGTON,—The publicity extravegance that opened in federal courthouse here this week is the most inherently unfair trial in many a year: The accused faced the wrong charge in the wrong place before the wrong

The central accusation is not that the President's men actually "covered up" the Watergate break-in; it is that they "conspired" to do so. The broad conspiracy cop-out is used when a prosecutor cannot prove the crime it self; its use ordinarily makes the skin of civil libertarians crawl. The wrong place is Washington, D.C., hothed of anti-Nixon sentiment, center of all the Watergate publicity, where defendants are spat upon as they come to court, the one area in the United States most likely to burden any juror with the most prejudice.

Wrong Judge

The wrong judge is "Maximum John" Sirica, the man who rode to renown by cracking the case originally with his aggressive prosecution from the bench. This udge, who appointed himself to try this case, cannot be as dis-interested as a judge must be. Of course, much good can come from the Watergate trial and its likely reversals on appeal. The conspiracy statutes can be exposed as unfair; new rules for changes of venue can flow from the refusal to avoid the circuslike atmosphere of Washington; and federal judges may learn the need to disqualify themselves, as Mr. Justice Rehnquist did in the Nixon case, to avoid even the appearance of favoritism.

Ages ago, when Special Prosecutor Archibald Cox fought against forcing the defendants to testify at televised public hearings, making the sensible point that such pre-irial publicity would harm their chances for a fair trial, Sen. Sam Ervin grandly swept aside that objection, saying that the exposure of the truth was more important than putting a few men in jail. Now the government is trying to have it both ways.

Those who are profoundly convinced that the Nixon men are guilty of trying to subvert our civil liberty should be in the vanguard of those demanding that the rights of these particular defendants be scrupulously safeguarded. But they are silent, perhaps in the mistaken belief curved by the counterapplication of excesses of power.

This is not the fair trial of Messrs, Mitchell, Haldeman et al, as it could and should have been, but the show-trial by proxy of Richard Nixon. Frustrated by the pardon of the man they wanted to see broken and punish-

Europe Oil Policy

George F. Kennan wrote prophetically on American foreign policy (Foreign Affairs, October, 1972) well before the October War that: "Economic as well as strategic considerations may soon make it necessary for the Western governments to exert their authority individually and collectively, with a view to reducing the Western dependence on the Middle East as a source of fuel. It is not too early for them to begin to study how this might be accomplished."

Your front-page stories: "U.S. Warns Oil Prices Pose a Disaster Threat* (IHT, Sept. 24), "France Tells U.S. Not to Bully Arabs on Rises in Oil Prices," and "Schlesinger Rules Out War Over Oil Prices" (IHT, Sept. 26) show to your readers how little progress has actually been made in that exertion of authority, which Kennan wrote about. It may be true that there are no "quick fixes." It certainly takes no great vision to predict that in a seller's market the prospect of succeeding with a consumer appeal for lower prices is low indeed, especially for wealthy consumers, even in the unlikely event of consumer solidarity. What to do then? A sensible man would of course under such circumstances start cutting his consumption as fer as possible and start looking for a different place to shop to fill his Is it too much to expect the

Western governments to at least not delay the development of alternatives to oil as an energy source; alternatives that are expected to be needed anyway within the next 15 years? The United States has made a good start to reduce its dependence on oil with the formulation of Project Independence, but the project seems to have difficulties in getting off the ground. There has been no comparable effort in Europe. May I for one who is troubled by the world food situation, but who does not mind keeping his thermostat down and driving to work on a motor scooter for a while, as long as something is being done to improve the situation, express the pious hope, undoubtedly felt by many, that the OECD countries in their present crisis talks pay studious attention to the formulation of an OECD Project Independence that should designed to make them progressively less dependent on oil, thereby bolstering their economies and making more oil available for the developing countries at a price they can afford. It appears that we have had a lot of talk by now. When are we going to have some action? The longer we wait the more difficult it is going to be powers in May, 1972. Under the agreement, the United States was allowed a maximum of 44 submarines carrying 710 missiles. The Russians were allowed 62 submarines and 960 missiles.

Because of the way the current submarines are equipped, however, neither country, using its existing vessels, would be able to have both the maximum number of missiles and submarines.

Poseidon, Strident

For example, the United States has 41 operational Polaris and Poseidon submarines with 16 missiles each—a total of 656. The new Trident submarine, expected to replace some of the older Polaris submarines, will carry 24 missiles. Thus, as the United States adds Tridents to the fleet -10 vessels are planned—the number of missiles will increase toward the 710 maximum, but the number of submarines will shrink because each of the new vessels carries a larger number

The Russians face a similar to resolve it in a way that will put them closer than the United States to the allowable levels of both submarines and missiles.

The Russians have 33 operational Yankee-class missile submarines. They are similar to the oldest type of U.S. Polaris and each carries 16 missiles of 1,500-mile range. The Russians

President Tito brought the case to light last month. Neither Marshal Tito nor any other Yugoslav official has pub-licly disclosed the country or countries that were supposed to have been helping the dissidents, but it was made clear that Yugo-

Labor Runs Hard in Scotland To Blunt Nationalist Thrust

By Alvin Shuster

(NYT).—Tam Dalyell, the 42year-old Labor party candidate in this area of West Lothian, came to a tractor and truck factory here at moon the other day to tell the 200 workers why, among other things, they should not vote for the Scottish Nationalist party, which wants an independent

Swiss, Italians Reach Accord on Tax Issue

ROME, Oct. 4 (UPI).—Italy and Switzerland today signed an agreement on financial arrangements for Italians commuting to work across the Swiss frontier.

The agreement said that the salaries of such workers would only be subject to Swiss taxes and that Switzerland would then hand over part of the tax income to the Italian communities on the other side of the border. The pact will go into effect in January. Commuting workers had been subject to taxes in both countries.

Artists Seek Indoor Show In Moscow

Also Ask to Be Paid For Damaged Works

MOSCOW, Oct. 4 (AP) .- A group of artists who staged a successful and unprecedented outdoor exhibit of abstract art last Sunday now want the authorities to allow an indoor exhibit lasting more than just an afternoon, a spokesman said today.

Alexander Glazer, a Moscow art collector, also said the group is asking a court to reimburse artists whose paintings were destroyed when police broke up an attempted exhibit of unofficial art in a Moscov vacant lot Sept. 15.

Authorities suppressed the first show with buildozers and water cannons, ripping up some canvases and throwing some into dump trucks. "We estimate the six paintings destroyed are worth 3,950 rubles ($2,233) and we should be paid," Mr. Glazer said.

He said the group has formed a permanent committee of four to represent the city's unofficial artists, and its first step was to apply to the Mocow City Council for an indoor exhibit.

"We want it to be more than just a day's show, preferably a week or more," Mr. Glazer said.

Peter Nichols' Ultimate Traffic Jam

By John Walker

CONDON. Oct. 4 (CHT).—The National Theatre is back at its old game of titiliating its middle-class audlence, Currently, it is done in two ways: by the conspicuous consumption displayed in such gaudy productions as "The Tempest" and more in the manner of popular Sunday newspapers, by a "shockhorror-probe" approach to the problems of society, revealing the anxieties and flattering the prejudices of the bourgeoisie and then resolving them in a reassuring manner.

Productions in this mode. which have put a high gloss on some successful methods of experimental theater, have included Trevor Griffith's "The Party" and Peter Shaffer's "Equus," to which must now be added Jonethan Miller's production of Peter Nichols's "The Freeway."

Mr. Nichols's play is the theatrical equivalent of those letters to the Times written by retired cc'onels, and signed "Disgusted of Tunbridge Wells," that are full of shortsighted nostalgia for the good old days and complain that the country lacks moral fiber. He takes a situation that has already been reduced to a al Theatre, is greed. Mr. Nichols cliche by numerous prophetic attempts to articulate it through and science-fiction writers—and the confrontation of a group of raised to the level of a powerful free-spending workers with a statement by Jean-Luc Godard in couple of mean-minded aristo-"Weekend"—and adds nothing of originality to it.

The setting is a traffic-clogged, litter-strewn expressway. The jum of cars stretches for a hundred miles in either direction in all traffic lanes. "The whole world's become one vast garage" says one of the characters. But it is not just man's mad love af-fair with the automobile that concerns Mr. Nichols, He sees the situation in allegorical terms. as the capitalist society in micro-

The freeway of the play's title is not merely the road that the drivers are attempting to reach, but a symbol of the Western way of life. And the freeway does not work-it is on the point of fluence of those who want to use it as they chase after trivial ends and, finally, befouled by them—as the pile-up continues for three days, the passengers turn the area into a stinking

The theme, then (appropriately for the heavily subsidized Nationcrats, all of them stereotypes which he manipulates without companction to make his point.

The only person who escapes the author's rancorous abuse is Wally (Lionel Murton), who does not own a car, is content with no more than meets his essential needs, and, when food runs out, goes off to bring mushrooms and berries from the fields. The play ends with him going off in the opposite direction to the masses, who have been ordered to evacuate their cars and walk home. But his individuality is as stereotyped as the conformity of the others and he is too passive a character to carry the burden

Jonathan Miller's production confirms the suspicions aroused by the National's "The Marriage Figure," that, as a director, he has no sense of humor. The comedy in the play is constantly muffed and the moments of slapstick are chimsily handled It is possible that Michael Blakemore, who has directed Mr Nichols's previous plays with great brio, could have made "The Freeway" seem less slow, hackneyed, bad-tempered and theatrically III-conceived. As it is, it is dards and a disaster by those we have come to expect of the National Theatre.

Home on Wheels

Les (Paul Rogers) is a car worker who ended up ensuring that the production line never stopped, not even when workers dropped dead. He spends his retirement driving a luxurious home on wheels together with May (Irene Handle), his wife, forever striving after gentility and achieving vulgarity, and her friend Evelyn (Joan Hickson), whose only interest is in ballroom dancing and finding a man to partner her now that her husband has died. They are conveniently stuck in the jam next to James (Graham Crowden), an aristocrat and a politician who likes to think he has the common touch, and his mother Nancy (Rachel Kempson), who treats everyone as her social inferior. There is a certain amount of fun provided by Mr. Crowden's excellent performance, twisting himself into strange shapes as he tries to ingratiate himself with Les, although Mr. Nichols spends more effort in showing how the workers have money but no taste in

Lionel Murton as Wally in National Theatre's "Freeway."

All the characters are types and none more so than Mark series of basically snobbish Mr. Nichols further opportunity for easy irony, as Mr. Crowden ends a speech urging that everyone should stick together for th common good by accepting a lift Dignam's minister, who arrives to placate the masses with a few ill-chosen words. This, too, gives away from the jam in the minENTERTAINMENT IN NEW YORK

First-Class Sales Always Hold Their Own

THE ART MARKET

By Souren Melikian

ONDON, Oct. 4 (IHT).-Sotheby's auctioneers must have been pleased Tuesday as they added up the earnings of a sale of Worcester porcelain; £83,283. Virtually all the items were sold with only ten lots failing to reach their reserve prices. Marcus Linell, a director of Sotheby's who was conducting the auction, said that in more than 50 per cent of the cases prices had fallen within the brackets of the presale estimates estimates, he said, that were neither optimistic nor unduly pessimistic. At the present time it was a remarkable achievement. The English economy being worse off than many on the Continent and the shortage of cash more acute, English works of art have been rather badly hit in the past few months since they appeal chiefly to British buyers. Victorian pictures, for instance, which were at their highest just a year ago, have been going down over the past few months, and silver didn't do very well in the latest July sales. One might have expected Worcester porcelain to take a beating because it is one of the most specifically English art market categories. Yet quite the contrary happened.

American Buyer

This was partly due to an American buyer, Ely Tullis, from New Orleans, who had seen the objects while in London. He left bids on a number of pieces and was on the telephone throughout the sale, He bought £11,905 worth porcelain, out of the total £83,283. Above all, his action spurred the sale on, for he was the underbidder on many other lots. It is interesting to note that he bought both some very expensive lots such as a rare teacup made of Worcester and decorated in London in the atelier of James Giles around 1770-1780 (£3,500) but also some much less expensive pieces such as a fine tea bowl and saucer of about the same period for £360.

His buys, aiming at fine or unusual pieces, point to a genuine collector's choice rather than that of an investor. It was typical of a collector to take an interest in an important punch bowl of the early 19th century, sold for £1,250. The bowl was made in the second factory set up at Worcester in Regency times to produce wares known as "Chamberlain's Worcester" and was decorated with a fox-hunting scene painted after Alken, who did sporting scenes. The unusual subject matter suggests a special order, as Sotheby's catalogue pointed out. Mr. Tullis is known to art-market collector, interested in the English school, and his buying at a

ROME, Oct. 4 (AP).—A head of Christ sculpted by Michel-angelo has been smuggled out of Italy and deposited in a Swiss bank Italian newspapers have reported. The reports said Italian customs officials told the police the marble head was smuggled across the Swiss frontier in August. They gave no other details. The head, part of a sculpture of Christ and the Madonna, was found two years ago in a crumbling wall in Rome. Arts experts said the head formed part of the first cast of Michelangelo's unfinished Pieta Rondenini of which only an arm is conserved in a Milan museum. The police said a builder. Amelio Schiavo, reported the porcelain sale was an unexpected special exhibitions, and she stop- knocked down at £1,400. This is ped collecting 10 years ago. Hence, the surprise effect that is always a major asset at auction

The majority of the rarest pieces were hers. She owned, for example, the fine coffee cup and saucer decorated with a pinkscale pattern. Pink-scale designs are among the rarest of Worcester wares, according to Robert Charleston, keeper of the Department of Ceramics at the Victoria and Albert Museum and editor and author of some of the sections—of "English Porcelain 1775-1850," published in 1965. The piece is datable, says Mr. Charleston, to circa 1770-1775.

Another outstanding collector's item, probably the rarest of all, was a plate with a pierced rim, datable to the same period. There is a similar example in Harry Marshall's book on colored Worcester porcelain, Mr. Charleston does not recall seeing another one. Interestingly enough, it fetched a small price—£170 against a £200-400 estimate. This was chiefly due to its unassuming quality. The elegant scalloped shape was painted with a spray surrounded by sprigs all in green delineated with black—nothing like the heavily pointed wares sometimes overloaded with silding, that made up a good deal of the sale, The second rarest piece in the sale, Mr. Charleston said, was an armorial tankard with the coat of arms of Albinia Havward who married Thomas Winstone in 1770. The tiny, 11.5-centimeterhigh piece was knocked down at £4,500, a price that must have satisfied both the auctioneers and

While they have every reason to be satisfied by present standards, it is worth emphasizing that Worcester porcelain has not gone up uniformly in recent years. Some objects in this sale had been auctioned before and others were perfect or near matches to other pieces recently seen in English auction rooms, allowing specific comparisons to be made.

Fine Tankard

For example, a fine tankard of cylindrical shape, circa 1770-1780, decorated with exotic birds, was a well-known type, and there is one in the Frank Lloyd collection at the British Museum. On March 29, 1966. a similar example sold for £1,800 at Sotheby's which, in view of the inflation, was con-siderably more than this year's price in real money. A fine Flight Barr and Barr dessert service of the Regency period, including 17 pieces decorated with landscapes, sold Tuesday for £880 as opposed to £900 Oct. 5, 1971. In some cases, however, Tuesday's prices suggested that that period is probably more sought after than it was some years ago. A vase bearing the same marks in gray, the cover bearing the letters "BFB," rose to £820, twice and a half the price it went for at Sotheby's sale of Nov. 29, 1970 -- 5230.

On the whole, Worcester porcelain remains one of the best opportunities for a collector with a discerning eye, R.J. Charleston points out that the production was considerable and there are few porcelain sales that do not include some nice items. It is not and will probably never become a speculative field, leaving it open to people prepared to train their eyes.

Nigeria is also planning to lay oil pipelines from the south of the country to the north, complete with storage depots to eliminate the frequent gasoline shortages.

The country also plans to go into the oil tanker service. Last month Nigerian officials were in Yugoslavia to sign agreements for that country to build the first of Nigeria's tankers.

The plan period will also see the government participating di-rectly in marketing of gasoline. Negotiations are under way with the oil companies on this.

Nigeria also plans to build two liquefied natural gas plants cost-ing a total of $6 billion to avoid waste caused by flaring off natural gas from its oil fields. This flaring has been done for some time. One estimate puts the amount at 30 million cubic meters of gas daily, thus costing the country sizable amounts of money.

U.S. Jobless Rate Rises to 5.8%

WASHINGTON, Oct. 4 (AP).— Widespread layoffs pushed up the nation's unemployment rate to 5.8 per cent of the work force last month, the highest level in two and a half years, the government reported today.

Another 440,000 workers joined unemployment rolls in September, bringing the total to a seasonallyadjusted 5.3 million, the Labor Department said.

The increase in the jobless rate, from 5.4 per cent in August, was the largest monthly increase since last January, when it also rose four-tenths of 1 per cent.

Unemployment has been creeping up gradually for the past few months and is expected to rise above 6 per cent late this year or in early 1975. Last October the jobless rate had dropped to a three and a half year low of 4.6 per cent. Since then the number of unemployed persons has risen

Mr. Vogelsang said none of the creditors' groups with claims against Herstatt had accepted and none had formally rejected his first settlement quotas in order to keep their negotiating positions open.

All were in favor of reaching agreement through liquidation and avoiding lengthy and costly bankruptcy proceedings, he said. Each creditors' group wanted higher payments than contained in the first quota suggestions but these could not be raised beyond the level of total funds available. Mr. Vogelsang said reports that some small creditors and local textile concern, plans to close its operations this month because of the recession and poor prospects for the future. Daishin Wool has 20,800 spindles and reported sales of 5.3-billion yen ($12 million) in the year ended June. Officials say the 650 employees will be dismissed by the end of the month. The company is owned 66 per cent by Toyobo Co., a major textile firm. The Japan Wool Spinners' Association says it is considering organizing an anti-recession cartel. The textile industry has asked the government to extend special financial assistance totaling 200 billion yen.

Opposition to Empain-Schneider Bid The French government is reported to be opposed to plans for the French-Belgian Empain-Schneider group to acquire control of Ste. Creusot-Loire, France's biggest builder of nuclear power stations. Sources close to the French Industry Ministry say the government favors maintenance of the status quo within Sté. Marine-Schneider, a holding which controls Creusot-Loire and is equally owned by Empain-Schneider and Ste. Marine-Firminy. Through its subsidiary Sté. Framatome, Creusot-Loire is the French licensee for the pressurized water reactor system developed by Westinghouse Electric Corp. The U.S. company also has a 45 per-cent interest in Framatome.

CENTENNIAL By James A. Michener. 909 pp. Illustrated. Random House. $12.50.

Reviewed by Christopher Lehmann-Haupt

of "Centennial." James A. Michener's enormous fictional meditation on the history of Colorado, I found myself having a high old time. I'd adjusted myself to Mr. Michener's occasionally gushing prose. ("It was in the autumn, however, that the aspen came into its true glory, for then each leaf turned a brilliant gold, so that a single tree seemed an explosion of vibrating loveliness.") The absurd early chaptersclude Time, the Cretaceous period a diplodocus, an ochippus and an eagle and rattlesnake locked in mortal combat-seemed safely behind me (like the Old Testament, "Centennial" begins with the beginning, only it's more thorough).

And Mr. Michener's narrative was really beginning to work on me. As it went snowballing through the 17th and 18th centuries, collecting Indians and buffalo. fur traders and beaver pelts, pioneers and Conestoga wagons. I found myself visualizing something like the drama of the American West-the overall surge of Manifest Destiny; the climactic turning points of the last buffalo to be slaughtered on the plain, the first Texas longhorns to be herded up the Pecos River, the arrival of hated sheepmen with their "woolies" and barbed wire.

Yet each episode stood as a fictional minidrama, too, whether it recounted the adventures of an imaginary French for trader named Pasquinel, who has wives hidden all over the continent and a flint arrowhead buried in his back; the westward trek of a Pennsylvania Mennonite called Levi Zendt, who arrives in Colorado after a harrowing ordeal only to see his pregnant young wife killed by a rattlesnake; or the empire-building of the Englishman Oliver Seccombe, who has the shrewdness to use the Homestead Act to build a cattle ranch of more than 5 million acres. Each episode caught my fancy instantly, since I'd already gotten to its hero as the minor character of an antecedent episode. Each was kept intensely dramatic by Mr. Michener's unerring storytelling instincts. Each seemed to be teaching me something, crammed as it was with odd and interesting lore and penetrating historical insights. Up to about the middle of the book, that is. After that, Mr. Michener's technique begins to turn against him. After about the 10th episode or so, the novel has accumulated so many characters and situations that things begin to come apart. So preoccupied grows the narrator with keeping it all straight that the succeeding episodes lose their dramatic unity, characters undergo sudden changes to fit into startling new developments, developments occur to accommodate startling character changes. One pictures Mr. Michener getting tangled on his blueprints, desperately driving a nail here, frantically sawing a stud there, falling off his ladder

UP to the 400th or 500th page into a wheelbarrow full of ce-

And the illusion of history suffers, too. As the story moves closer to the present, the narrative sweep narrows to the flicking of a whiskbroom. By casting his epic in the form of a gigantic background memorandum being prepared by a historian for a magasine called US, Mr. Michener is eventually forced to bring us back to the unheroic details of the present. This creates an illusion the wrong end of a telescope and leads to what the historian David Hackett Fisher calls in his book, "Historians' Fallacies." the "fallacy of presentism." by which be means the mistaken notion that what is relevant to the past is only what is relevant to the present.

Of course, this may be what Mr. Michener ultimately intended-to show how heroic our past seems in the perspective of the present. But the demonstration is not particularly interesting. In the last episode of "Centennial" we follow the daily rounds of a contemporary rancher who is worried about ecology, about what new strain of cattle to breed, about whether or not to marry his Chicano lover. The chapter has no focus, no organization, no story. It's a boring series of nervous hiccups compar ed with the exciting drams of the earlier chapters. One might just as well look for entertainment in the daily headlines.

PITTSBURGH, Oct. 4 (UPI).--Managers Walt Alston of the Los Angeles Dodgers and Danny Murtaugh of the Pittsburgh Pirates go with their best pitchers this weekend in the first two games of the best-of-five National League playoffs. Alston picked righthander Don Sutton (19-9) and Murtaugh named lefthander Jerry Reuss (16-11) to start Saturday. Their choices for Sunday were righthander Andy Messersmith (20-6) for the Dodgers and lefthander Jim Rooker (15-11) for the Pirates.

Although the Pirates defeated the Dodgers in all six games they played this season in Three Rivers Stadium, oddsmakers made Los Angeles a 13-10 favorite to win the playoff and go to the World Series.

Kills Feeling Better

Heartening news for the Pirates was the possible return of right-hander Dock Eits (12-9), who has been out since Sept. 11 with a broken finger. Ellis said he did not think he would be available for the two weekend games, but would be ready when the playoffs resume Tuesday at Los Angeles. Dodger catcher Joe Ferguscn felt it only right his team should be favored over the Pirates.

"We've got the best record—and the best team in baseball," Ferguson said. "Remember, we won a division with Cincinnati in it. They're a tremendous team, but we were better this time."

"From here on, it's not so much a matter of who's going to be best, but which team will take advantage of the breaks and op-portunities," he continued. "We've been a club that has been doing that, and we'll keep doing it. I really believe that."

The Dodgers' Steve Garvey, a candidate for most-valuableplayer honors in the National League, said the team was "confident and optimistic "

They had to play .680 baseball the last two months to win their fourth National League East pennant in the last five years. The Pirates were as much as 14 games under .500 this season and were in last place as late as June 15. "The writers gave up on us and the fans gave up on us," centerfielder Al Oliver said. "But we didn't give up on ourselves." "This is a team that wouldn't quit on itself," Murtaugh said.

South Africa Enters Finals Of Davis Cup, but India Balks

JOHANNESBURG, Oct. 4.-South Africa won its way into the Davis Cup finals today, but a political dispute threatened the next match.

India, which reached the finals by defeating the Soviet Union last month, has said repeatedly that because of South Africa's apartheld—or racial segregation— policies it would refuse to meet South Africa in the finals,

The International Lawn Ten nis Federation intervened in the dispute today after South Africa gained an unbeatable 3-0 lead over Italy

To Consult Government

The ILTP secretary, Basil Reay. telephoned Indian officials and said he had "begged them to agree to play South Africa." Reay spoke with the Indian tennis secretary Raj Khana, in New Delhi,

"He said immediately India will not play the South Africans, but I appealed to him to think not of South Africa but of the Davis Cup, and he agreed to speak with the Indian government on Saturday," said Reay. "We will simply have to await the outcome "

If India persists in refusing to play, South Africa will win the Davis Cup by default. This was decided by the Davis Cup sevennation committee of management in New York in September.

Easy Victory

The South Africans romped to victory in the semifinals with victories in the first two singles matches and the doubles today. In the doubles, Bob Hewitt and Frew McMillan scored a predicted victory in straight sets over Adriano Panatta and Paolo Bertolucci, 7-5, 6-4, 10-8.

After 14 seasons, the 36-yearold West, the only player in National Basketball Association history to be named to play in the all-star game every season he was in the league, joined the growing list of standout: who came up together in the early 1960s to retire.

Oscar Robertson, who spent 14 seasons in Cincinnati Royal and Milwaukee Buck backcourts, and Wilt Chamberlain, the greatest scorer in pro basketball history, had previously announced their

"The major reason for my retirement." said West, "is because I have set high standards for myself that I'm not willing to compromise. I have seen other player: play longer than I thought they should have. I did not want to do that."

He leaves the game as the third highest scorer in NBA history with 25,192 points, including the 1969-70 individual scoring championship (31.2 points a game). He also owns the best individual scoring performance by a guard, 63 points against the New York Knicks on Jan. 17, 1962.

"Catfish" Hunter is the Oakland A's bread-and-butter nitcher while Mike Cuellar of the Baltimore Orioles can come back on two days' rest, so they will be the starting pitchers Saturday in the opening game of the American League playoff series. Hunter was 25-12 during the season and by far was the best pitcher on a solid A's staff. He also won two playoff and two World Series games last year.

Cuellar, who at 37 is crafty and durable, was 22-10 for the Orioles. Against the A's in the regular season, he lost three of four decisions, but he's the best man on the Baltimore staff to come back on short notice.

Palmer to Go Ken Holtzman will pitch against Dave McNally in Sunday's game here and for the third game in Baltimore on Tuesday, it will be Vida Blue against Jim Palmer. While the A's will use John Odom in long relief, the Orioles will counter with Ross Grimsley, who was 18-13 as a starter during the regular season but is the youngest and strongest man on the four-man Baltimore rotation and thus capable of pitching often in the playoffs.

"I don't mean to downgrade Kenny [Holtzman] and Vida [Blue]," said A's manager Alvin Dark, "but Hunter has to be the man who takes us all the way."

Manager Earl Weaver of the Orioles feels the same about Cuellar, who responded well every time he was asked to pitch with less than his normal rest while Palmer was disabled for 54 days with a sore shoulder.

Weaver said it would be worse if Cuellar got too much rest, "He did that after the All-Star break," Weaver said, "and lost three straight. To much time off doesn't work to his advantage." The A's are 13-10 favorites to win the best-of-five series.

PARIS, Oct. 4 (IHT),—She is a pretty female, a princess of a sort, and used to nothing but the best. She has a delicate temperament and so she is spoiled.

Every afternoon, after the finest sponges wash her off, a little Beethoven, Mozart and even Wagner are piped into her chic and neatly kept stable. She is allowed two pets, a sheep and a pony. She is not asked to work too hard, but when she steps on the track, she is a prima donna, In five races this year, Allez France, a precocious filly, is undefeated, never having had to extend her efforts to finish far in front of the fields.

But as is often the case with other desirable females, there is a purpose to the careful handling and that is to win on Sunday the Prix de l'Arc de Triomphe, the most desirable of races, a mile-and-a-half classic over the green grass of Longchamp against the best horses in Europe.

Four Fillies Entered

Temperament, hard to read in the form sheets, may well play a major role in the race worth more than 2,5 million francs as there are for fillies in the classic and they are all favored to do well in the world's richest horse race. The Daniel Wildenstein entry of Allez France and Paulista, a 3-

Unlike last year, Angel Penna will be preparing the 4-year-old U.S.-bred filly for the outing. Penna took over the training of most of Wildenstein's horses this year and has worked wonders. Still, the year won't be unforgettable unless he can saddle the first Arc de Triomphe winner ever for the Wildenstein family, which has been wheeling and dealing in order to dominate the French racing scene. Money has never gotten into the Wildensteins' way, and they can do things other owners cannot do or just won't. The French scene is very conservative, very proper, very chic. Installing classical music systems in stables is revolutionary.

WASHINGTON,-In his clos- me to mind my own (and then ing speech last week to the cconomic summit, President Ford told Americans to "make up a list of 10 ways you can save energy and fight inflation. Little things that have become habits out that don't really ... affect your health and happiness... Exchange your family's list with your neighbors and send me a copy.

Dear Mr. Pres-Enclosed please find my list of ways we could Buchwald save energy and fight inflation. As soon as I made it, I went over to see my neighbor, Schlumberger, and asked him for his list, Schlumberger hadn't made up his yet, which didn't surprise me. It takes him three weeks to cut his lawn and he still basn't returned the lawn chairs

he borrowed in June. "Schlumberger," I said, "the President has asked us how we can save energy and fight inflation. My wife and I notice you always leave the light on in your bathroom. Now it's obvious to us that there isn't somebody in the bathroom all the time. Why couldn't you turn the light out when no one is there?'

Instead of Schlumberger accepting this in the spirit in which it was given, he said something like. "We'll keen our (and then he said a terrible word) bathroom lights on all night long if we want to."

I then went to item No. 2. "I notice you always seem to drive to work alone. Is there any reason you can't car-pool it?

Well, Mr. President, I want you to know Schlumberger started screaming and yelling and telling Leipzig Orchestra to U.S. BERLIN, Oct. 4 (AP).—The Leipzig Gewandhaus symphony orchestra will begin a five-week concert tour of the United States beginning Monday, the East German news agency ADN reported today. The group will play 20 concerts, in New York, Washington and Boston. It also will appear in Toronto, ADN said, with the tour to end Nov. 12.

there was that word again) business. I couldn't believe someone would be so selfish during a crisis of this proportion.

I was tempted not to bring up item No. 3. but I decided the interests of the country came first so I said, "It appears the fuel truck comes around to your house every two months. The oil man told my wife you keep your thermostat at 74 degrees. Why couldn't you close off a few rooms in the winter and turn the dial down to 67 degrees?"

I want to tell you, Mr. President, you would have thought I asked Schlumberger to go streaking down Pennsylvania Avenue at high noon. He said he would keep the (put the word here) thermostat at any (the word again) temperature he (word) pleased. And then he said a strange thing. He said why didn't I worry about my own (word)

I had a good mind to just walk out but I still had a few more things on my list. "Schlumberger," I said, "that gaslight you have in front of your house—it seems in front of your house to me it's just a habit with you. Does it really do anything to affect your health or happiness?" I guess I touched a sore nerve because Schlumberger asked me to get out of his (I wish he had a larger vocabulary) house.

I know it comes as a shock to you. Mr. President, that there are such thin-skinned people in this country. I went to the next item on my list, which was what Schlumberger was doing about inflation. I said "My wife and I went through your garbage last night and we were shocked to see how much good food your family wastes and...

Mr. President, I know you're not going to believe this but Schlumberger grabbed me by the back of my coat and pants and pushed me right out the front steps. I almost broke my arm. Anyway, here's the list you asked for. Maybe you can do more with Schlumberger than I can. As you can see from my account, he's not much for jawboning. He's really a first-class (use any word you want),

Sincerely. Art Buchwald, Mary Blume

Stanley Donen, His Movies, His Tombstone

PARIS (IHT).—"Singin" in the Rain," which Stanley Donen and Gene Kelly made in 1952, is a most lovable film, though in fact audiences didn't especially love it. The people who really cherish it are film buffs and film makers: Truffaut beams at the mention of its title, Kubrick used the title song in "A Clockwork Orange," an early Godard shows some youths scampering in the street and shouting, Hommage a Stanley Donen!"

Donen himself, an amiable ex-hoofer whose lanky frame is starting to show the effect of too many business lunches, is a plainspoken man, a blabbermouth he says, who varies between frankness and horrible contrition toward those whom his words may hurt. He doesn't honestly think "Singin' in the Rain" is all that great,

"I think it's great fun, but I don't think it's the Second Coming of Christ or anything as a movie. I always offend the other people who were involved when I say that and I don't mean to hurt anyone.

"I'm delighted Godard, Truffaut and Kubrick like it-what more can one ask?-but when I see movies that I think are great for example Rashomon or 'Citizen Kane' or 'The Gold Rush' or '8 1/2.' I can't believe 'Singin' in the Rain' belongs in that group." Donen is a master director of musical film, working at MGM in its heyday under Arthur Freed, who was not only a brilliant producer and fine lyricist. but who also dubbed the vocals for Leon Ames in Vincente Minnelli's "Meet Me in St. Louis." Donen's musicals have ranged from the isunty, cheeky Gene Kelly films to the charming and highly sophisticated "Funny Face" with Fred Astaire and Donen collaboration has perhaps been overexamined, with elaborate exegeses about who con-tributed what: "I don't have anything negative to say about Gene," Donen says. "The only thing about Gene is he feels that even if you are talking to me, you should start your article by mentioning him. I made three pictures with him, I owe him

deny it, we were in the right imaginative book," says Donen, place at the right time—in Hollywood at the end of the Bushy Berkeley era. They were ready to do another kind of musical The musicals that Gene and I did and that Vincente [Minnelli] did were more related to the René Clair and Lubitsch American, but oddly enough the inspiration was European." Dones's new film, which will neve a blockbuster opening next month at Radio City Music Hall, is a musical version of Antoine St. Exupery's "Le Petit Prince." made in England. It has a score by Lerner and Loewe of "My Fair Lady" fame and it's the first film musical in ages to have an original score by a major songwriting team.

musicals than to Busby Berkeley. They were certainly very

"It took forever," Donen says, "We wasted a year arguing about casting. The rest of the time has been spent on the movie. Four years." The coticals alone took a year and a half and Donen worries that the film will be promoted as kids' stuff while it should attract a wide range, including those who tripped out at "2001."

"The Little Prince" is a muchloved book, but bewildering to a great deal. Also, you can't film money men. "It's a very Stanley Donen, 22 years after "Singin' in the Rain." "full of dreams, you're never sure who's there. There's a snake, and a fox, and a little boy, a sort of shimmering figure who may or may not exist.

David Graeme-Baker-SIPA-Press

"When the people at Para-mount heard there was a snake," says Donen, "they said what kind of snake. Is it a drawing? Is it a rubber snake? Our snake is none of these. He's Bob Posse [director of "Cabaret"]. He wears a suit and does a tango. I'm terrifled that people will say it isn't the book.

The year spent on casting "The Little Prince" was not really wasted, says Donen, for whom casting is all.

"You have to take what the actor has to offer and use it, you offer what you have. Directing is casting, through osmosis one assimilates. Director is an ill-chosen word, it sounds more exclusive than it is, the French term metteur en scène is better. "I once had a conversation with Lindsay Anderson that lasted two weeks. He's very good with actors and I asked him what he did to make them so much better in his pictures than in other people's. He said,

'I tell the actor what he is I explain the character.' I said.

that's bullshit, everyone does back and said, 'I've been thinking. The only thing you can do to make an actor better is to love him.'

"Esther Williams once fired me. I'd only directed one movie and I would have directed anything traffic! Arthur Preed asked me if I'd direct her. I said sure. Then she said she didn't want me because she didn't feel I would respect her acting. They said, go tell her you would. I couldn't do that. She was absolutely right. I didn't do the Although Donen is identified with musicals, he has made many nonmusicals, "I had a reputation for not being able to make nonmusicals. It took forever to convince people that I knew people don't always sing and dance.

Among Donen's nonmusicals are his sour and funny study of the breakup of a marriage, "Two for the Road," in which Audrey Hepburn for once played a woman, not a gamine, the enchanting "Bedazzled" (which Donen's wife actresswriter Yvette Mimleux, mis-chievously suggests would make a good musical) and the lamentable "Staircase" with Rex Harrison and Richard Burton.

"'Staircase' was not successful," says Donen, "The main reason was we had two stars and we had to make it in the place they wanted. Paris. It should have looked like a documentary, crummy. The original script was marvelous, but you can't like the film. That's what I mean about osmosis. You get started on the wrong track and there's nothing vou can do." Donen's next film will star Liza Minnelli and Burt Revnolds and will not be a musical. He reckons that, apart from "The Little Prince," he hasn't made a musical since 1958: "I feel rather far away from musicals. From 1958 to 1974 is a very long time. I feel like David Selznick when Cary Grant asked him, Why do you work so hard, you drive us all crazy?' He said. Because I don't want them to write "He Made 'Gone With the Wind' " on my tombstone.'
